Vicky Ryles — Theatre and education have featured prominently in Vicky's life since childhood. In her younger years together with her friends she acted out parts of pretend scenarios and relished creating stories and 'newspapers'. Playing 'school' in her younger years transformed into her role as a dedicated educator for forty years. During this time, Vicky kept up her writing, which included news stories, articles for magazines and newsletters, as well as children's stories. Also, during her educational career, she created varied workshops in creative writing and taught acting skills to children and adults. She developed scripts for her students to enact and directed them in plays for school performances. Vicky enjoyed acting in many productions as well as directing plays for community audiences. She helped establish the Winchester Little Theatre for Children Program. All in all, she has been drawn to these two fields and have found them greatly rewarding, mostly for giving her the opportunity to help others expand their knowledge, skills and talent.
